Why This Training Now? As we transition from a state where every aspect of the mission was virtual in which there was a myriad of emotions associated with the pandemic itself - changes to processes, our relationship with others, and how we communicated, to a hybrid environment in which some, although not all employees will be returning to the brick-and-mortar office. Guess what? There is going to be a myriad of emotions, as they relate to change in general, as well as processes, our relationship with others, and how we communicate. So now what? How do we continue to engage a hybrid workforce? In some aspects, we'll look back to when it was 100% virtual employees, and explore what worked, or perhaps what should have been done under normal telework situations a few years ago. Communication! Research has shown communication is consistently a top-rated skill and compared to all other skills account for a disproportionate share of success. We'll also discuss virtual engagement and how do we create an environment where employees are less stressed and self-motivated.
