

Margaret McMullen

Professional Speaker

Margaret McMullen is an award winning, international public speaker and corporate facilitator with over 10,000 hours of training experience. For the past fourteen years she has spoken to a wide variety of audiences, from executive suite level to entry level personnel on three continents.

In addition to over 30 years in a corporate environment, Margaret has been a leader in the non-profit environment. From PTA president to community volunteer, she has managed local, as well as international teams.

Her training is relevant, practical, energizing and fun. Highly interactive and experiential, participants leave with powerful, practical information and action plans.

“I come from a place that’s common and familiar to many of the hardworking team players throughout every organization,” Margaret says. “I’ve been where they are, experienced their challenges and know how to speak to their concerns—whether that’s how to communicate with greater ease or ways to keep a project on track and on time.”

Making the move from corporate life to business owner and professional trainer who’s able to savor the satisfaction of teaching others was an easy step to take for Margaret. After all, 30 plus years spent in the corporate world in positions as varied as behind the scenes “go-to” person, to high-visibility leadership roles served her well.

Today that broad background, including experience in the financial, health care, ophthalmology and digital imaging industries, gives Margaret special insight as she trains participants in topics ranging from management skills and business writing to customer service, time management and conflict management.

For more than fourteen years, Margaret has been successfully sharing her vast experience with leadership concerns such as business writing, managing change, communications and generational management.
