Teams - an essential part of any organization. But what if those team members are never all in the same place at the same time? How do you build a culture of inclusiveness; one of collaboration - a workforce that achieves optimal outcomes? Are the leadership principles of yesteryear applicable today? Or are you playing a new game with old rules?

A hybrid work environment brings challenges and opportunities, particularly change - both welcome and some not-so-welcome. Knowing how to navigate the challenges and capitalize on a hybrid environment's opportunities can test the strength of departments, teams, their members, and leadership.

Good teamwork is often a result of hardworking managers, supervisors, and frontline employees all striving to maximize potential and carry out the mission. Attendees will leave this one-day seminar with improved knowledge and skills and be ready to pivot from an all-employee telework environment into a hybrid workplace that is an effective and productive organization.
